 Vigo, July 4. — Spanish naval authorities at Vigo said that the Spanish motor tanker Bonifaz sank last night after a collision about nine miles off Cape Finisterre. "The Bonifaz sank at 10 30 p.m., B.S.T.," said a spokesman for the naval headquarters at Vigo. He added: "German motor vessel Sloman Malaga is bringing eight survivors to this port, two of them women, one of them in a serious condition. The Dutch motor vessel Setas is also rushing to this port with survivors; four of them are in a serious condition from burns. German tug Atlantic, Spanish tug Vulcano and, I think, several warships also rushed to the scene of the collision, which took place in thick fog," the spokesman said. (Later) The Spanish naval headquarters at Vigo said that the crew of the Bonifaz succeeded in launching two lifeboats before the vessel sank. Several other vessels were heading for the scene of the collision, but rescue work was hampered by thick fog. — British United Press.
