REPORT ON THE PROGRESS OF THE WORK OF THE COMMITTEE ON THE REVISION OF THE STATUTES OF THE UNITED KINGDOM

REPORT ON THE PROGRESS OF THE WORK OF THE COMMITTEE ON THE REVISION OF THE STATUTES OF THE UNITED KINGDOM

The Committee on the Revision of the Statutes of the United Kingdom was set up in 1966 by the Home Secretary, Mr. James Callaghan. Its terms of reference were to examine the operation of the law and to recommend ways in which it could be improved. The Committee has since that time held a number of public hearings and has received many suggestions from the public. It has also conducted extensive research into the operation of the law and has produced a number of reports. The Committee's work has been carried out in a number of stages. In the first stage, the Committee examined the operation of the law in general. In the second stage, the Committee examined the operation of the law in particular areas. In the third stage, the Committee examined the operation of the law in particular areas. The Committee's work has been carried out in a number of stages.
